

Positive Impressions Introduces Personalized Pet Food Can Covers for Veterinary Practice Promotions

April 23, 2026

BLACK RIVER FALLS, WI - April 23, 2026 -

Positive Impressions LLC has added personalized pet food can covers to its line of veterinarian supplies, offering practices a functional item for distribution to clients.

The PFCC13 Personalized Pet Food Can Covers fit most standard pet food cans of three ounces or larger. The covers come in multiple colors and support one-color, one-location imprinting for clinic details. Priced at two hundred fifteen dollars per pack of two hundred units, the product requires approximately twelve days for production and shipping following proof approval. The covers measure three and three-eighths inches in diameter.

These items address the common need to keep opened canned pet food fresh. Veterinary practices can include them with wellness visit materials, new patient packets, or nutrition discussions. The design allows the product to serve as a daily-use tool in client households.

A client from a veterinary clinic that has used similar promotional products from Positive Impressions noted the value of receiving practical items during visits. The feedback indicated that such giveaways help clients manage routine pet care tasks more effectively.

Tim Torkelson, co-owner of Positive Impressions LLC, stated, "The personalized pet food can covers provide veterinary practices with a straightforward option that aligns with everyday client needs for food storage."

Torkelson added, "The product integrates into existing distribution processes without requiring changes to clinic workflows."

Positive Impressions maintains a catalog of more than three thousand items developed for veterinary clinics and hospitals. The pet food can covers join other products such as prescription bags and flat bottom bags that support medication dispensing and client materials. The company has structured its offerings to cover operational needs alongside client-facing resources.

The covers contribute to discussions around pet nutrition and storage best practices. Veterinary staff can reference the item when advising clients on diet management or emergency preparedness. In emergency grab-and-go kits, for example, the covers help maintain food quality when refrigeration is unavailable.

Positive Impressions sources materials with attention to durability suitable for refrigerator or pantry use. The imprint area accommodates clinic logos or contact information in a clear format. Practices select colors to coordinate with existing branding elements where applicable.

The addition of the PFCC13 reflects the company's approach of responding to practical requirements in veterinary settings. Orders undergo a proofing process to verify customization accuracy before production. This step helps ensure the final product meets practice specifications.

Positive Impressions processes orders with a focus on reliable timelines. The company does not offer free shipping on these covers. Detailed product specifications, including exact color options and imprint guidelines, are available for review prior to purchase.

Veterinary practices operate with varied client interaction models. Some distribute promotional items at checkout, while others incorporate them into educational conversations. The pet food can covers adapt to different approaches due to its compact size and utility.

The company has supplied the veterinary industry since two thousand eight. Its product selection includes items for daily operations, client appreciation, and special events. Categories encompass prescription accessories, memorial resources, and promotional tools.

Positive Impressions emphasizes quality in material selection and print consistency across its lineup. The pet food can cover meets the same standards as other catalog entries. Practices evaluating the product can compare specifications against their current client support materials.

The covers have relevance in contexts beyond routine visits. They appear in recommendations for travel kits or disaster preparedness discussions where maintaining pet food integrity matters. Veterinary professionals can use the item to illustrate simple storage solutions during client education sessions.

Positive Impressions LLC supplies veterinary clinics and hospitals with a diverse selection of customizable products. The company focuses on solutions that assist with practice management and client interactions. Its offerings support a range of needs from operational efficiency to thoughtful client resources.
